Founded in 1937 as Polk's first radio station, WNTC has become a popular Clarkson-concentric activity.

WNTC now serves both the Clarkson and State College of Education campuses from its central station on the third floor of Nash Hall. Transmission is accomplished by seven current transmitters operating from other locations on the campus.

Since its start in the attic of the now extinct President's Building, WNTC has been a rapidly advancing organization driven by the desire of service to the students. All students from Clarkson at the State College of Education who are interested in any aspect of radio broadcasting will find a place to display their talents at WNTC. Operating engineers, sports and regular announcers, engineers, publicity men, technical engineers, along with many others are given a chance to show and develop their abilities and learn new skills.

WNTC, a vigorously active and still growing organization, has taken its place as one of the most rewarding student activities of the "Northern Tier Colleges."
